Angella MacEwen is an economist with the Canadian Union of Public Employees (CUPE), and a policy fellow with the Broadbent Institute.

Angella has worked as an economist for over ten years, focusing on busting conservative myths about how the economy works, and proposing solutions that are grounded in evidence and will help us build an economy that is both equitable and prosperous. She lends her number crunching skills and economic expertise to several advocacy organizations and government advisory committees, such as the Green Economy Network, Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, the Labour Market Information Council, and the federal government's Sustainable Development Advisory Council.

Before going back to university to study economics, Angella spent 14 years in the Canadian Naval Reserves. She joined as an Ordinary Seaman at HMCS Unicorn in Saskatoon, SK and retired as a Lieutenant (Navy) at HMCS Scotian in Halifax, NS. In between, Angella served in a variety of part-time and full-time roles across Canada, including Deck Officer on HMCS Shawinigan, and Unit Environmental Officer at HMCS Scotian.

Angella lives in Ottawa with her partner and their daughter.
